Construction Spending Struggles to Regain Strength

Construction spending fell 1.3% in June, following a 0.5% drop the prior month. Large declines in public works projects were behind most of the overall drop. Private outlays fell 0.4% in June after falling 0.3% in May.

Declines in Public Works Rain on Construction Outlays

- Overall construction spending fell 1.3% in June, and spending in May now shows a slightly smaller 0.5% drop. Both public and private outlays fell during the month, but public construction fell 3.7%, the largest one-month drop since March 2002.
- Unusually wet weather in the Midwest, East Coast and South was likely behind June’s big drop. A 6.4% drop in road projects accounted for more than half of the drop in public construction.

Still a Few Bright Spots

- Spending for sewage and waste disposal has been a big growth area in public projects, with outlays up 17.7% over the past year. Many communities have paired these projects with greenways and parks, boosting amusement and recreation outlays.
- Residential construction also appears to have been hindered by the rainy weather, with spending for single-family homes falling 0.7% in June and down 8.5% year-over-year.
